The blow staggered Jim Younger and Miss Muelier. They had not dreamed that they could be prevented from their planned marriage. It aged the man more than years in prison. But the indomitable woman did not give up. She appealed to the Pardoning Board and the Governor for a full pardon for Jim Younger.

But the struggle of years, the anxiets the sleepless nights, the physical effor and mental anguish, had undermined the young woman's health. The physicians found that she had consumption and they told her to seek another climate.

Then Jim Younger realized how great was his capacity for suffering. He was racked and torn by emotions so terrible that his mind became unbalanced. To marry Miss Mueller meant more to him than snything else in the world. It was worth all the years he had spent in the prison walls. And she was fighting the white death thousands of miles away. He could not go to her, for the law said he ould not have the state. He could unly hope that the ban against him would be removed, that the board of pardons would grant his prayer.

But it decided against him. Years before, after the Northfield raid.
